I stand against redistributing/amalgamating/merging regional and rural electorates purely on voter numbers/volume. Weighting needs to be given to Electorates with larger area coverage to balance with voters. This ensures appropriate representation of these areas in the State Parliament. Failure to maintain or increase this representation will see the regions that deliver significant resources for the use of the rest of the state receive less voice. We've seen in history the areas that have little or no voice are forgotten about and left behind. This risks losing these areas and further condensing our population in the South East. Which will exacerbate many economic and social issues we are already facing. This would be a travesty!
