Currently, regional and rural Queensland is already under represented, by changing electoral district boundaries and reducing regional Queensland representation even further will make living in these regional areas more difficult and further restrict the regions from access to a fair share of support. Additionally, is this is the plan, then perhaps seperate the state, making 2 seperate states, so that regional and northern towns and cities would be better represented and supported. If anything, SE Queensland is already over represented and this should be reduced, and not based on population density, but instead focus on the size of an electorate and contributions made. With regional communities contributing all the mining royalties to this state government, they are needed more and should be better represented.
