I am of the view that given the scale of Queensland, determining electoral boundaries purely on the basis of population is unfair and unreasonable. How can state parliament be described as democratic and representative, if the vast majority of seats are located in the south east corner of the state. Where is the voice for the rest of Queensland's population? The geographic size of regional seats are already so large that members require airplanes or days of travel just to see constituents. The regions are the economic lungs of Queensland and deserve more representation, not less. Without strong and consistent advocacy, the regions will stagnate and wither. How is that good for anyone?
